

AFFAIRS IN AND ABOUT WESTERLY

Political Small Talk—State Bull Moose Strength Estimated at 8,000—Funeral of Marcus M. Darling—High Street Bridge Opened to Travel—Horse Thief Caught.

Politicians of prominence are making careful canvases of the situation in the state, giving equal attention to towns and cities and, as a result, it has been ascertained that there are in round numbers 8,000 bull moose in the state, and of this number at least 200 are from the regular republican ranks. This information is being made available to the state and is being made available to the state and is being made available to the state.

Carol Aronovici, who had addressed the Western District Nurse association, has been appointed director of the recently established National bureau of municipal and efficiency work in New York and with a New England branch office in Providence. Experts from all sections of the country will be in the new work, which will consist in making surveys and city planning, taxation, transportation, housing, school sanitation, industrial sanitation, leisure time and recreation, etc. This is the work which has made the specialty since graduation from Brown university.

The funeral of Marcus M. Darling, who was stricken with a paralytic shock last Tuesday, was held at his home on the West farm, 171 West street, Rev. Clayton A. Burdick officiating. The bearers were a delegation from the city of Providence, the city of the Republic, of which deceased was a member. He served in the civil war with Company L, Third regiment, Rhode Island heavy artillery. The burial was in Uxbridge, Mass., Thursday.

East Greenwich academy, which was instituted one hundred and eleven years ago, opened its fall session Wednesday, with addresses by Grand Army Samuel W. Irwin, Rev. W. I. Ward, secretary of the board of trustees, and Rev. W. H. Hurst. The registration is equal to that of a year ago and includes students from Westerly. The new members of the faculty are Miss Frances McIntire of Hartford in mathematics and German; Miss Lottie Johnson of Westerly, Latin and Greek; Miss Carrie Stewart of New London, who will have charge of the new department of domestic science.

The Howe Waste and Packing company was incorporated by the secretary of state, Thursday, Charles L. Kenyon of Richmond, Charles C. Howe of Hopkinton and Benjamin W. Orman of Providence are the incorporators, with capital of $25,000. The new company will manufacture railroad and other waste, packing, waste, lubricants and oils. The firm will be located in Providence, though the interests of the company are very convenient to Westerly.

Local Larceny.
After a long chase, Sheriff John B. Wixom captured George Brown for the theft of a horse and carriage from the barn of Nathan Palmer in Eketon. Brown pleaded guilty before the clerk and will be given hearing by Judge Lewis in the Second district court.

Some of the laborers who engaged to work for the E. K. Watson company of Warren, who have contract to construct the new freight depot, demanded an increase from $1.50 to $2 for a week of nine hours. The demand was denied and the working force has been somewhat decreased.

The High street bridge, the new steel structure, was opened to traffic Wednesday afternoon. Dr. Assenon was the first to enter and cross with an automobile. Work will now be commenced on the proposed new West street bridge. The work will be carried on without interruption.

THE GERMANICUS CAMEO
A Work of Art Which Has An Uncommonly Eventful History.

In the large hall of the cabinet of medals in the national library at Paris, is exhibited the celebrated cameo engraved in agate and known as the Cameo of Germanicus. The eminent curator of medals M. Babelon has just had it mounted by a Parisian goldsmith, in its original setting. He had discovered in the storerooms of the library the design for the mounting in gilt bronze, in the form of a portfolio, supported by two reclining lions; this original mount bears the signature of the goldsmith Delafontaine, a pupil of David. It had been made to replace the primitive mount in enamel and gold and decorated with religious symbols which was stolen during the revolution. The cameo, which represents in low relief the Apotheosis of Germanicus, has a history full of vicissitudes. It belonged in the first place to the treasury of the Caesars at Rome, and later to that part of the Byzantine empire. The emperor of Constantine, Baldwin II, gave it to Saint Louis, who had the Saint Chapelle constructed to keep it in—for he had been converted to Christianity and was called the friend of Joseph at the Court of Pharaoh. In 1341 Philippe de Valois sent the cameo to the pope at Avignon, Clement VI. Later, Clement VII restored it to the king of France, Charles V, who again installed it in the Saint Chapelle. At the time of the revolution, the National Assembly transported the great cameo to the cabinet of medals, where, in the night of the 26th to 27th Pluviose of the year Twelve, it was stolen. It was about to be sold for $60,000 in Amsterdam, when the detectives employed by Napoleon found it, but it had been stripped of its frame, which had been melted up, and which was then replaced by the temporary mount already mentioned.

Electricity in Abyssinia.
The efforts made by the powers to prevent the importation of arms and ammunition into Abyssinia have constrained the Abyssinian government to erect the Abysinnian factory in the capital, Addis Ababa. The cartridge manufacturing plant has been purchased in Germany, and has a capacity to turn out 10,000,000 cartridges per annum. The building destined to receive it has already been completed, and the machinery has been despatched from Germany and is about to arrive at Addis Ababa. The factory will have a workshop attached for the repair of military weapons, in which from 15,000 to 20,000 rifles can be repaired every year. The mechanics required for this service have been engaged in England are also on their way to take up their work in Addis Ababa. Power will be supplied to the cartridge factory, as well as other factories in the capital, by a hydro-electric plant supplied by a Manchester firm. This plant is already erected at the power station on the river Akaki, eighteen miles from the capital. It consists of two 300-horsepower dynamos, which will transmit a 5,000-volt current to Addis Ababa, where it will be used not only for power, but also for house and street lighting.

Birds Big Eaters.
"Baby" robins have been observed to eat half their own weight of beef grubs, digest all this within three hours, and then be ready for another meal. A pair of red-eyed vireos were noticed to eat a number of beet their offspring over a hundred times in ten
